Korobochka (コロボ) @cirnosad
Nov 13, 2023 · 20 tweets · cirnosad/status/1724097636016554122

Dismantling the "no body owes you anything" boomer meme.
This meme is used to promote hard-heartedness, despicable callousness, atomised individualism and general satanism.

Where did it come from?
What does it truly mean?
Why should we overcome it?
And how?

A short thread. /🧵

This idea that "no one owes you anything", isn't as old as it seems, but a reflection of the world we live in today.
It seems reasonable, the implication being you didn't exchange anything and so cannot expect anyone to help you without impetus.
But what does this assume?

1. It assumes a mutual exchange had not already taken place.
2. It assumes that a mutual exchange cannot take place in the future.
3. It assumes whatever value you give someone isn't automatically a value you obtain.
4. It ignores the created value neither of you will enjoy.

In today's world, any kind of value you add usually takes time. Time is frozen into units of money. This money can be transfer immediately to obtain value through indebtedness.
But the transfer of money is not necessary, especially if working in a team or through mutual benefit.

The idea that "no one owes you anything", thus means you are an individual. You by default are not part of any team but yourself. If you feel down, it's your fault. If you feel inept, you didn't try hard enough.
"No one is going to help you" is the implication.

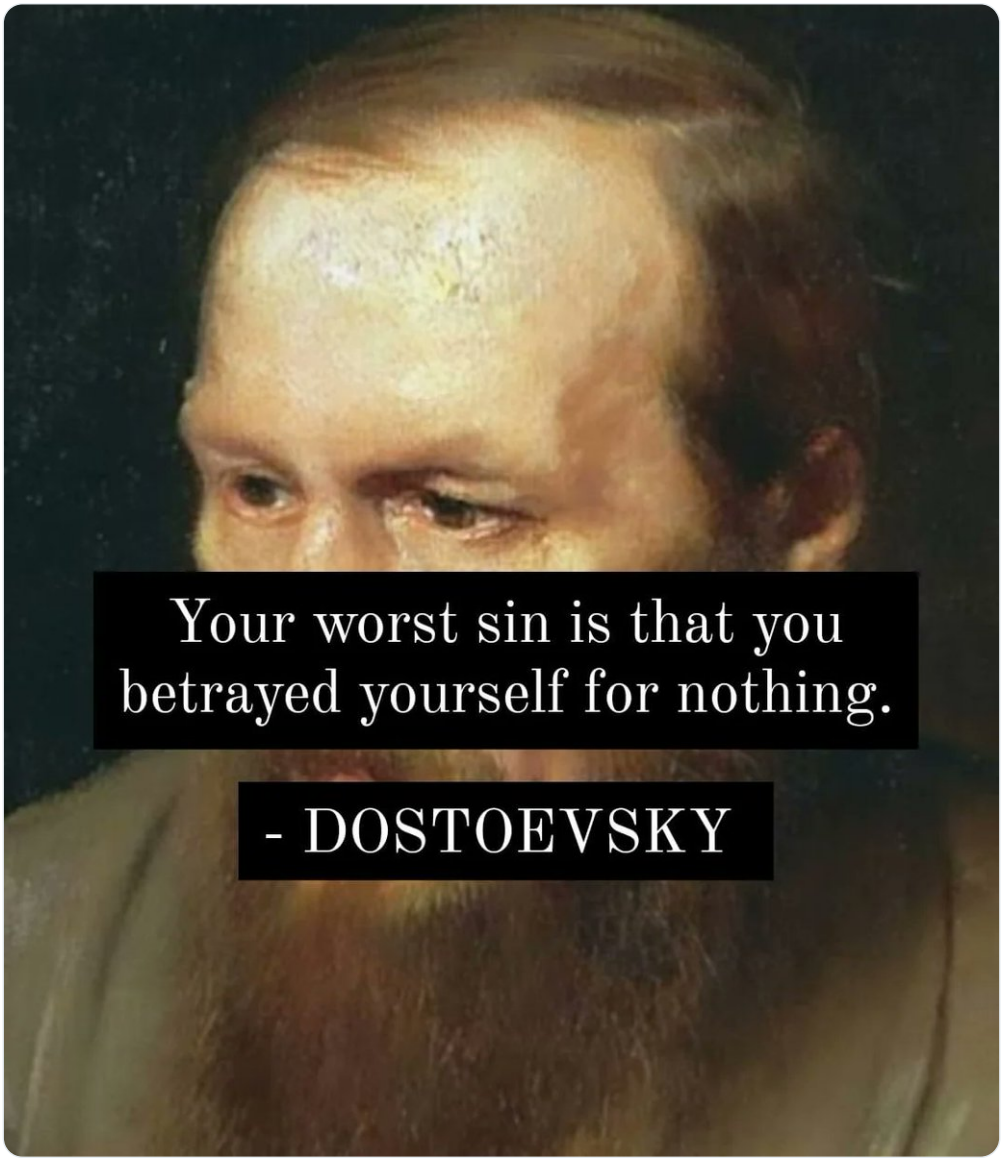
Only by serving someone, obtaining value as a person or building up reserves of money doing so, will the world around you "owe" you something.

And of course something immediately evades you here... what about the people that can CREATE money? What do you owe them?

You owe them absolutely everything, not just now, but from the past and deep into the future. They can create an infinite amount of money and own your time, your parent's time and your children's time if they ever allow you to have any.

After all, you couldn't trust your fellow nationals by giving them value for free.
The most valuable things you could have given them is your time, affection, loyalty, strength and wisdom.

No, it must be for money... which if it can be conjured out of nowhere is worth NOTHING.



But it isn't just you, but everyone around you. Boxing themselves in, waiting for an exchange to happen. Never looking for people around them to give value to for free... why would you? When you could obtain some "precious" wealth... To do what with?

I wish I knew.
Today we live in a world without love or care. We commoditised attention and chase it with money because of our loneliness. We completely lost our society, and sold it for absolutely nothing.

Now we owe no one anything.
But we are in turn owed nothing.

We are entirely alone.

If only we had corrected our perspective to see that we are not individuals. We cannot exist alone. Can we even think along if there is no language to speak and communicate with others in? No!

What is the meaning of feelings if and exchange must be made for them to matter? Nil.

The most precious things were free all along.
The smile on our friend's faces.
The warm hug from those affectionate towards us.
Teaching a child something you've mastered, and watching their excitement.
Building the first step of a staircase whose destination we may never see!

Everyone wants these things, more than anything material despite what they tell themselves. Nothing you buy will bring you happiness -- you can see this clearly once you've attained a great deal of wealth.

The most valuable things have no monetary price.
Yet they are priceless.

The solution is simple, change your perspective:
"The world owes you everything"
And with this perspective
YOU owe the world everything.
Find your friend, who is unhappy, and pick them up. Check on them. Try and make them smile and you too will smile. Go embrace the lonely heart.

If you need help, go help someone. If you need to learn something, go teach someone. For if you owe the world everything, the world also owes you everything and someone will come and help you, teach you, make you smile and embrace you.

..And the many become one human body again.

And suddenly the middle man is cut, there's no need to exchange money for these essential things.

i.e. Those who have the ability to create an infinite amount of money would suddenly become powerless, after all, their power comes from your misery and distrust for your fellow man!

It may seem naive but you're going to benefit from it even if you get nothing in return at first.
If you make someone (with empathy) happy, they will definitely want to make you happy too.
It will make them even happier, your smile will be infectious.

If everyone around you is happy, and you are sad, you will get attention -- people will want you to feel happy too.
If everyone is owed happiness, comfort and a future, everyone will get it.
If no one is owed it, typically and at most, you'll have just one of these things.

That's really all there is to it, just invert the mantra and talk about it to others. Share this thread, share your thoughts. I hope I've at least made you smile oomfies because your happiness truly makes me happy too.

Love, your korobochka. 💙 /End

P.S. I know this seems like a pipe dream, especially in our rotten western societies, but there are enough of us even here... enough to rebuild it all and save each other.

This thread is dedicated to those who came to me at a time of need and tried their best to make me smile.

...