

Korobochka (コロポ) 🇺🇸🇯🇵 @cirmosad

Mar 16, 2026 · 12 tweets · cirmosad/status/2033659872978604498

World War III: The Fatal Mistake In Iran / 🇺🇸

... and why nothing can stop this war except the defeat of the United States.

Introduction: Salami Tactics

Imagine a heavy roll of salami, sitting on a table. It's usually a substantial amount of meat, and not something you can eat in one sitting. In fact, to properly dine on a piece of salami, you should slice it thinly and make a sandwich out of it. Gradually, salami slice after salami slice, the roll will disappear. But at no time except at the end of the roll, do you feel such a substantial amount of meat will run out.

This is the classic "salami tactic" concept, and the same idea applies to every aspect of life and war. Let us start with something that should be immediately familiar to any professional.

Office bullying can be modelled through salami slicing. Imagine a slight against you — very small, not enough to make you retaliate. Everyone prefers a comfortable peace, after all. You might even rationalise it as a mistake. But then it happens again and again, with each move it perhaps slices deeper into your personal space or rights.

But with each slice, your standing is lowered to the point where you're faced with the same dilemma: It's cheaper to let it slide and hope it doesn't happen again. Before you know it, you've been completely undermined and removed from the picture with miserable prospects for the future.

This is the most basic form of what is usually termed coercive gradualism, or gradualist tactics supporting a grand strategy. In RAND parlance, "threshold stretching and exploitation". In fact, this is exactly what started this war with Iran which is bound to expand as all means by which it can end have already been destroyed.

This isn't the first time this has happened, in fact, another war was started by the exact same mistake. Let us discuss that first before moving on to the current war that is raging and expanding horizontally (geographically) and vertically (in terms of escalation).

Which war am I talking about exactly? You see, that war was World War II.

Special Study Case: World War II

The treaty of Versailles which formally ended WWI was unfair to Germany. It restricted the size of its army and navy then cut away much of its territory. It was so unstable a situation that restricted what should be a great power to a miserable existence. Along with the corrosive influence of the anti-German degenerate Weimar regime, the rise of Hitler was inevitable.

Hitler wanted one thing: To make Germany great again. For that, he needed its army in the best shape and its territory expanded to its natural size.

After raising his army, Hitler went to work reversing the content of this treaty, beginning at the most natural point: [1] Moving his soldiers into the Rhineland in 1936. This was to be a DMZ between Germany and other European states. At the time, Britain was the enforcer of the treaty and the Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin saw this as a correction of an unfair treaty.

Hitler's Ambassador-at-Large and soon to be Foreign Minister Ribbentrop, saw the information from the event in a different way: The UK saw an incremental move by Germany and decided it was not worth going through another disastrous war to stop it. Remilitarizing the Rhineland was an important move for Germany's rearmament as it allowed Germany to fortify its western front.

This enabled it to focus on the south and the east...

The next move by Hitler was to unify Germany and Austria [2]. Today this is depicted as an annexation (The Sound of Music certainly makes it seem like such a thing). Nevertheless, the UK accepted this. There was no protest in Austria and it was largely bloodless. Opposing it could be construed as opposing Austrian's right to self-determination.

Just six months later, on September 1938, Hitler demanded the Sudetenland from Czechoslovakia [3]. Chamberlain was a little concerned to say the least. England and France took this seriously, and kicked off the Munich conference. Hitler was told that he may have the Sudetenland but he must not make any more territorial demands. This was a signaled threshold, but without any kind of promise of action. It was declared a "peace for our time" by Chamberlain.

But Ribbentrop saw it differently. He had just violated the terms of the treaty of Versailles numerous times without action from the UK. Almost like clockwork, six months later, Germany took all of Czechoslovakia [4].

That was the final threshold for the UK. Chamberlain immediately issued a guarantee to Poland that the UK will enter a war with Germany should its sovereignty be impinged. Ribbentrop saw this as a bluff and in fact Germany invaded Memel in Lithuania (a German territory captured by allies in WWI) just days after Czechoslovakia [5]. No foreign policy statement was made by any party.

The stage was set for the second biggest mistake in human history. I will argue later, that the mistake made on the 28th of February is even worse.

Invasion of Poland

Exactly six month after taking Czechoslovakia, Hitler and Stalin jointly invaded Poland. The excuse was a false flag, the famous Gleiwitz radio incident. Given the steady timing of each invasion, it would have been unreasonable to believe it wasn't a premeditated excuse for war.

This acquisition would have secured the entire eastern flank of Germany, preparing the western front for eventual invasion. But the UK wasn't going to allow this invasion to take place without responding. King George the VI fulfilled the promise made by his prime minister and declared war on Germany just two days later.

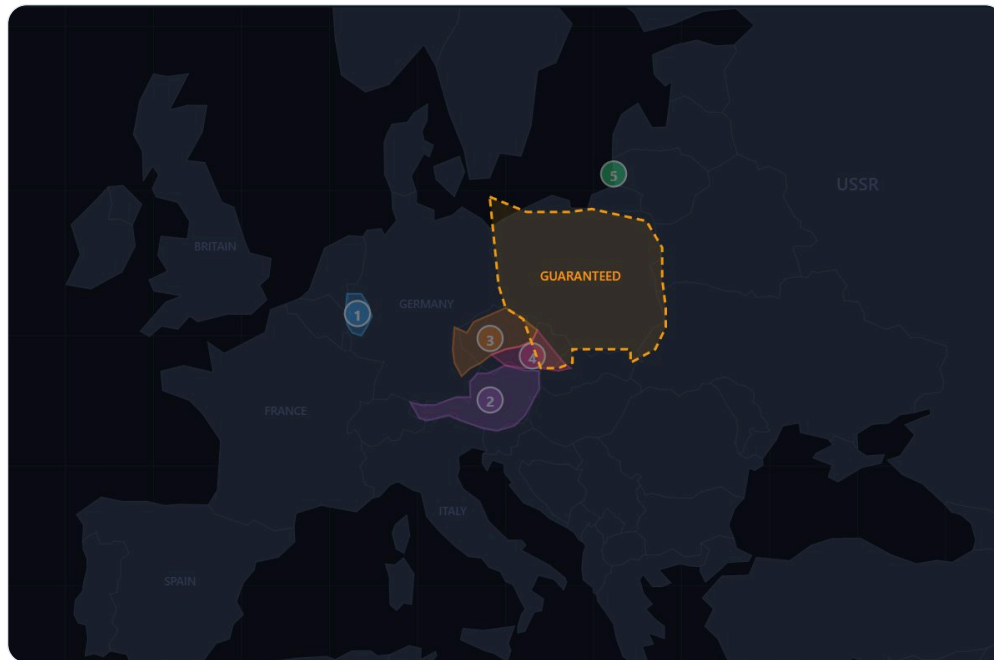

The UK knew Germany would eventually invade France, ally with Italy and possibly even the USSR. It didn't want to wait until it could no longer fight Germany, but went to war immediately when its threshold was crossed.

This set in motion the most miserable episode in human memory, and catastrophes that we are still dealing with today.

Hitler's Savage Look

As England's declaration of war crackled over the radio and an official telegram was received from the British embassy, translated by Hitler's chief translator Paul-Otto Schmidt, Hitler was quite shocked. A war with England, at least at this stage, was not part of his plan. He wanted to salami slice his way into Europe, and prepare himself to a fait accompli victory later. A war completely destroyed all of his plans for a great Germany.

Schmidt recounts Hitler's immediate reaction after this news: He turned towards Ribbentrop with a savage look that spoke of betrayed trust and asked him in a snappy manner: "What now?".

WWIII: The Project For the New American Century

PNAC was a think tank project founded by Bill Kristol and Robert Kagan, students of Strauss. These largely liberal men called themselves neoconservatives and quickly found support from a republican party trying to reinvent itself after the victories of the cold war and the grand finale of Desert Storm.

Their argument can be surmised as such (even though they would never put it in these terms): The world was enjoying peace, but an America without enemies and without conflicts could not realize its own power. What they desired was an enabling act, much like Hitler's numerous false flags, that set America into a motion of war. Then rearmament, nuclear weapons and missile defenses could be put up.

[Of course, as we know today they had a different goal: They wanted to make Israel Great Again, and in the process, get rid of America as people knew it transforming it into something entirely different and subservient to Israel. I will not cover this subject in this thread, however.]

After getting their men into power, Dick Cheney, Donald Rumsfeld and George Bush, they got exactly what they wanted with the September 11 false flag. Their immediate course of action was to invade Afghanistan after framing Osama Bin Laden and his organization (a key ally of the US against the Soviet Union). The world was largely hoodwinked. The US received support from virtually every single person in the world, even in the streets of Tehran there was nothing but sympathy and support. Even I supported the US, quite strongly too. My uncle worked in one of the world trade centers (though thankfully he was out of state on that day).

The US invaded Afghanistan and defeated the Taliban by gaining support from all neighboring nations, Iran and using the full force of NATO, Australia and New Zealand as well as the northern alliance. It did not take long for the US to win.

Before the dust even settled, the US began making the case for invading Iraq. The excuse? Weapons of mass destruction. Meanwhile, the US had created a new class of weapons, low-yield minimal residual radiation nuclear weapons initially intended for Robust Nuclear Earth Penetrator (RNEP) or bunker busters. It also started to fund construction of all kinds of missile defenses, the reason for which was not clear to outsiders.*

Seven Nations in Five Years

Right after the dust from Afghanistan was settling, Wesley Clark reported that more wars were planned. To quote him directly:

"We are going to take out 7 countries in 5 years: Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, Libya, Somalia, Sudan and finishing it off with Iran"

And quelle surprise, while the sequence didn't go to plan, nor the timing, every single country on the list was attacked or taken over in some manner.

Iraq War (2003-2007)

The Iraq war was different. No one with a brain bought the WMD excuse. Besides, how can Iraq even deliver this? This war was pushed by Benjamin Netanyahu who guaranteed "positive reverberations" in the middle east should it be carried out and result in knocking out Saddam Hussein. Curiously, this same man "predicted" the destruction of the world trade center in 1996 and multiple times after that.

The world was split but the US found some support. France stayed out of the war. The UK and other parties joined in. This wasn't as easy as Afghanistan. The US used a weapon of mass destruction on the Baghdad Airport to force a victory, a fact recounted by both American and Iraqi sources and made undeniable by certain evidence, such as the wounds on one particular boy... but never mind the details.

[* But would be clearer if you understood the insider perspective of 9/11. I will leave that subject for my final thread however and it will not be covered here.]

Syria out of Lebanon

Right after taking Iraq, the US and Israel carried out another false flag, killing the Lebanese Prime Minister Rafic Hariri. This was pinned on Syria. The Russian president Vladimir Putin allowed the passage of a UNSC resolution, forcing Syria out of Lebanon. The US was in Iraq, ready to invade seeing the deadline was set to be as unreasonable as possible.

But to the US's surprise, Bashar Assad complied with the UNSC resolution ahead of schedule and was out of Lebanon. The US then took the Lebanese government over with a colored revolution.

But it faced difficulties in Iraq. To Syria and Iran, it was quite obvious that they were next. Iran was also cornered politically using the UNSCR with the excuse being its nuclear program. Of course, Putin helped the US again and passed the resolution.

The US decided to focus on Lebanon first, instead of Syria. To do this, it had Israel do its dirty work.

2006 Lebanon War

The Israelis were bombing Gaza (as they regularly do) when Hezbollah decided to carry out an operation in support of the Palestinian people, kidnapping some Israelis on the border with a cross-border missile attack. This was used as a casus belli to go to war with Lebanon.

This was a very destructive war, which destroyed a great part of the southern half of Lebanon through savage Israeli bombings, but to everyone's surprise... Hezbollah won. As revealed later by Nasrallah, it had received covert support from Syria, which was firing M600 missiles at Israel and providing radar coverage of the battles. It also transferred the critically important Russian Kornet ATGM system to Hezbollah. But all of the fighting was done by the latter.

The war's most dramatic moment was when Hezbollah used a C-802 cruise missile to knock an Israeli Corvette which was attacking Lebanon's infrastructure. Nasrallah became infamous for his live transmission, telling people to look out at the sea, and watch the hostile Israeli ship burn.

The Israeli infantry failed to defeat Hezbollah and was in fact, defeated itself.

This was a problem. It was already 5 years since 9/11, and only Iraq was knocked out and though the government in Lebanon was changed... Hezbollah was still firmly in control of the ground.

Meanwhile, in Iraq, a full scale insurgency was destroying much of the US's military ground strength. The US was ill-equipped to deal with this situation. It expected to face armies and easily toppled governments. Not highly motivated fighters.

The US decided to flip the script, and borrow the power of an insurgency.

The Redirection

The US saw an axis forming: The misnamed "Shia-crescent", spanning Iran-Iraq-Syria-Lebanon. It wanted this axis destroyed. The war in Lebanon demonstrated the limits of direct overt power, so the US switched back to its tactics against the Soviet Union: Borrowing the strengths of hordes of Sunni extremists.

The strategy was outlined shortly after the war in Lebanon by Seymour Hersch in the New Yorker, in a paper titled "The Redirection". That is, redirecting an insurgency back onto its "source", the Shia crescent.

The first test run was in Lebanon again in a little known conflict, the Nahr Al Bared conflict that lasted 15 entire weeks and resulted in the complete destruction of a Palestinian refugee camp. Most of the tactics seen later by US controlled terror groups was formulated in this little discussed conflict.

This set the stage for the coup de grace against the middle east.

THE REDIRECTION

As it covertly teams with Saudi Arabia and Israel against Iran and Syria, the Bush Administration risks empowering Sunni extremists.

✦ This summary is AI-generated. Learn More »

By Seymour M. Hersh

February 26, 2007

A STRATEGIC SHIFT

In the past few months, as the situation in Iraq has deteriorated, the Bush Administration, in both its public diplomacy and its covert operations, has significantly shifted its Middle East strategy. The “redirection,” as some inside the White House have called the new strategy, has brought the United States closer to an open confrontation with Iran and, in parts of the region, propelled it into a widening sectarian conflict between Shiite and Sunni Muslims.

To undermine Iran, which is predominantly Shiite, the Bush Administration has decided, in effect, to reconfigure its priorities in the Middle East. In Lebanon, the Administration has cooperated with Saudi Arabia’s government, which is Sunni, in clandestine operations that are intended to weaken Hezbollah, the Shiite organization that is backed by Iran. The U.S. has also taken part in clandestine operations aimed at Iran and its ally Syria. A by-product of these activities has been the bolstering of Sunni extremist groups that espouse a militant vision of Islam and are hostile to America and sympathetic to Al Qaeda.

One contradictory aspect of the new strategy is that, in Iraq, most of the insurgent violence directed at the American military has come from Sunni forces, and not from Shiites. But, from the Administration’s perspective, the most profound—and unintended—strategic consequence of the Iraq war is the empowerment of Iran. Its

Efforts to curb Iran's influence have involved the United States in worsening Sunni-Shiite tensions. GUY BILLOUT

The Arab Spring (2010-2024)

Using Wikileaks, which had established itself as a reputable source, and the charisma of Obama, the US launched the Arab Spring starting in Tunisia. Successive governments were removed and replaced with Sunni extremists from the Muslim brotherhood.

The most violent of these clashes were in Libya and Syria. Libya fell in a year. Syria though, took 13 entire years and the full force of the US empire. It also ended up dragging Iran, Lebanon, Turkey, Russia and Ukraine into the war. Assad at the time the war started, said he could hold on for 10 years. He delivered 13. In a sense, the fall of Syria was somewhat delayed and complicated by other wars.

Libya fell without much support from the outside, but with extremely terrible outcomes for Europe, Africa and its people.

But in the greater picture, no one had stopped the US directly. Obama invaded Syria in 2014 and there was no reaction. Russia which came to support Syria had its planes downed, there was no reaction. Israel bombed Syria, sometimes with extremely devastating weapons. No reaction, and only appeasement.

Trump bombed Syria in 2017 and 2018 again, bragging that the initial strike was meant to kill Assad. Trump had fooled him into negotiating with him. These aren't my words, but Trump's. Nothing was done about this.

Iran wasn't without its moves. It supported the Ansarallah (Houthis) group's takeover of Yemen, which resulted in a disastrous war with Saudi Arabia that ended with a stalemate but control of the red sea and Bab Al Mandeb passage. The US tried to do everything to reverse this unexpected conflict from entering its calculus. But that was to no avail, Yemen was there to stay.

At some point during this war, Yemen struck Saudi oil infrastructure severely and Trump wanted to attack Iran for it. Iran called his bluff, reading a mass-missile response and Trump held back.

Trump was emboldened nonetheless, by his previous actions, and decided to run a full Salami tactic campaign on Iran.

Trump personally oversaw the assassination of Soleimani on January 3rd, 2020. Iran responded days later with an attack on a US base. The reaction was seen as substandard by the US even though Iran signaled the precision of its missiles.

Khamenei cried over the martyrdom of Soleimani, a man he saw as his closest devotee and the man with the most potential to lead Iran in the future, and made a promise. A promise largely forgotten or ignored by the United States:

The attack on the US base was just a slap on the face, the real revenge for the assassination of Soleimani will be the removal of the United States from the entire middle east.

Gaza Genocide (2023-)

Meanwhile, the Israelis were bombing Gaza continuously from 2022 onwards, at one point in time decapitating the entire leadership of PIJ, a competitor to Hamas. At the time Hamas did nothing. They were seen as treacherous. The Israelis attacked without warning and levelled entire buildings in response to counterattacks. It was a savage episode most had forgotten: Operation Breaking Dawn of 2022. It set the scene for what would happen a year later.

In late 2023, the Israelis planned to decapitate Hamas and then invade Gaza and kick its people out to Egypt. Hamas found out and launched Operation Flood on October 7th 2023, the 50th anniversary of the 1973 war on Israel.

This resulted in a genocide, but survival of Hamas, and the entry of Hezbollah into the war. Even Yemen entered the war...

War on Iran Part I

... yet, Iran did not enter the war. This was interpreted as a sign of weakness by the US and Israel. They decided to continue salami slicing it. Israel had been bombing IRGC staff constantly in Syria with Russia assistance. It decided to escalate and bomb the Iranian embassy annex, killing the leader of the entire operation in Syria.

For the first time ever, Iran retaliated against Israel in Operation True Promise 1. Israel did not counter attack immediately, but Iranian President Raisi was assassinated shortly afterwards with Azerbaijan's assistance.

The Israelis weren't done though, and assassinated Nasrallah next. Iran again, retaliated in a limited manner. Hezbollah was forced into a ceasefire and the next day Syria was attacked by Turkey.

Iran did not come to Syria's assistance, much like Chamberlain, it decided to make peace with Turkey's territorial grabs. At this point, the Americans and Israelis assumed that the resistance axis was over. Indeed, so did I. The loss of Nasrallah and then Assad made recovery seem almost impossible. But I knew that Khamenei would not make a promise without ensuring it would come true. Indeed, one of the last personal effects of Nasrallah broadcast to Lebanese networks was a note, saying always to trust the judgement of Khamenei.

Trump took power and just 6 month after Syria's fall, Israel and the US attacked Iran's nuclear program and decapitated its leadership. Iran's response was limited but quite firm. The US did not reveal its role until the end when it telegraphed a very light attack on Iran, which Iran replied to in a similarly light manner destroying a US satellite uplink.

This was interpreted as a sign of weakness by Trump and his advisors. Like a rabid dog, Trump had tasted blood one too many times and the taste grew on him. He decided to try his luck with a more nearby target with a larger pay off...

Venezuela (2026)

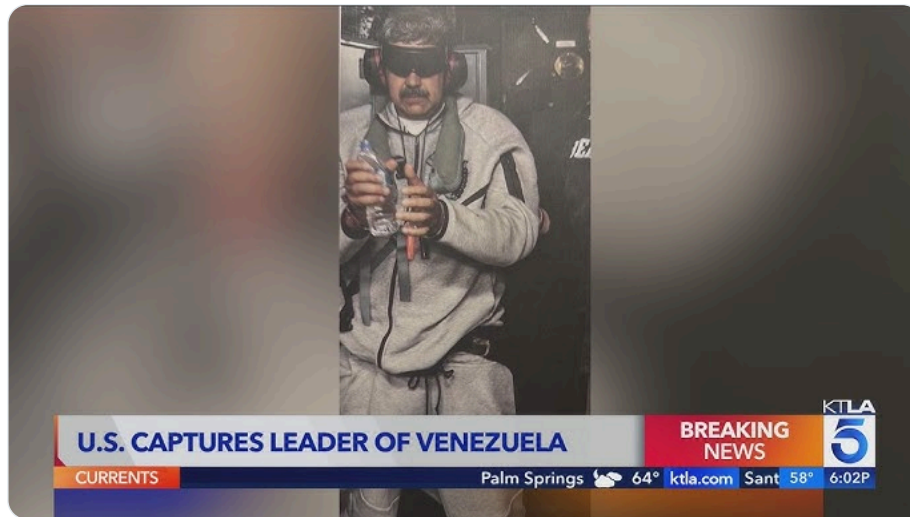

In an eerie parallel with WWII, just six months after the war with Iran, and on the anniversary of the assassination of Soleimani, Trump invaded Venezuela and captured its leader. His forces were of course assisted by the coup plotters who now run the country, but his advisors spoke of Wunderwaffe such as goy beams and discombobulator. Completely fictional weapons. There is little reason to believe Trump doubted their existence, however.

No one, not even Russia or China opposed Trump's outrageous take over of Venezuela. He turned his eyes towards Greenland, and was rebuffed by his own allies. A bit stuck, Trump decided to take on Russian and Iranian ships, capturing many without opposition, some with the assistance of India.

It seemed to Trump that no one could or wanted to oppose the United States. The mood in Washington was "anything goes", and even the Department of Defense had been renamed the Department of War.

The American people were euphoric. They saw war as quick, easy and profitable. "Why not?", people like NigFuentes signaled to the masses? Just go in there and take what is other's and make it yours.

Naturally, with the world constantly tolerating Trump, just like it tolerated Hitler, nothing could go wrong... or could it?

Iran on Purim (2026)

Even before the operation on Venezuela began, Trump was building forces up in the middle east. He had declared Iran's nuclear program "destroyed" (even though it was not the case), but still insisted that he wanted more. He wanted it decommissioned (again?) and he wanted Iran to destroy its ballistic missile program. Something Iran would never ever do.

Mark Levin, a rabid and psychotic Zionist, had been demanding the assassination of Khamenei, the leader of Iran, as a result of the so-called stalled negotiations. Levin did this continuously on his Twitter account and in private communication with Trump. All those who could provide negative reinforcement were either sidelined (e.g. Tucker Carlson) or out-right assassinated (like Charlie Kirk).

Initially, Trump wanted something else from Iran. He wanted a "small attack" on Iran, to which he would invite an equally small retaliation. No one in the US explained the point of this, but it becomes clear when you consider the Salami tactic model. The US wanted a full scale war with Iran, but on its terms, with Iran on the back foot. It wanted to use gradualism to destroy Iran's defenses and will to fight.

Iran wasn't having any of it. Khamenei signaled this simply to Trump: You fire so much as a bullet more on Iran and it will be a full scale war that no one could control.

Trump was convinced by his advisors that this was a bluff, and went for the most violent option possible with JD Vance's encouragement: Assassinating Khamenei.

An hour later, a conflict began that drew in all countries of the middle east and is threatening to destroy the entire economy of the world.

World War III (2001-)

Everyone agrees that WWII began on September 1, 1939 when Germany invaded Poland. But I would argue that this was wrong. It actually had begun 3 years earlier, set in motion by appeasement towards Hitler without controls. That is not to say that the actions by Germany weren't correct: It was right to take back control of its lands. The manner it was done though, created bad priors on the part of Hitler's advisors.

Appeasement at each step created the illusion of impunity and this illusion led to miscalculations, which ultimately led to war.

The US, under Trump, abused negotiations with Syria back in 2017, with the aim of assassinating Assad. Though this was foiled by good fortune, the US received no punishment for it. So it led to the assassination of Soleimani, the embassy staff, Raisi, Nasrallah, decapitation of Iran's leadership and finally Khamenei and much of Iran's military leadership.

Given this prior of impunity, what could possibly change the US's outlook? Absolutely nothing but total defeat, which will involve, unfortunately, the deployment of nuclear weapons and the expansion of the conflict to the entire world.

If Iran were to even entertain the idea of a ceasefire while the US was still in the middle east (essentially, if CENTCOM still existed), the US will return to its gradualist strategy, perhaps attacking Iran again in 6 months with even more furiousness and full initiative. Iran is trapped in this war.

Is the US? Indeed it is. If the US was to fall in the middle east, all its other moves, carried out through appeasement by the world would be gradually undone. Perhaps Russia would finally discover bravery and down its ISR planes directing Ukrainian terrorist attacks on its territory?

Perhaps China would call its bluff and peacefully take Taiwan much like Austria merged with Germany. Perhaps the traitors who took over Venezuela would look for a better deal, and China would actually enforce it?

Worse yet, the Israelis control the US entirely, and cannot afford to lose its protection. The Israeli dream of expansion is on life support as Iranian missiles erase more and more of Israel's infrastructure and military power. A US pull out would mean its end, and so its likely to use nuclear weapons openly should that happen. Something the US doesn't want signaled, as the conflict would spiral out of its controlled yet again.

But the current metastable situation will not last long. Israel is invading Lebanon, Iran's critical infrastructure is being bombed, the world is running out of fuel, and the US is running out of conventional stand off missiles.

The world awaits one more mistake, one more miscalculation, one more arrogant move by this century's Hitler, before its plunged into the abyss from which it will never recover under this sun.

And it all began in one Salami slice, cut back in 2001 just after the 9/11 false flag.

/End

Postscript

As I was writing this thread, Trump said he was "shocked" by Iran's response, claiming he never thought it would geographically expand the conflict. He of course, lied about everything else but somehow transmitted this accurate reaction. The parallels with WWII grow deeper.

One Expected Iran to Attack the Gulf States, We Were Shocked" — Trump | APT

Post-Post Script: Just minutes ago the rabid dog mindset surfaced again with another geographic expansion.

<https://twitter.com/i/web/status/2033662541076038008>

...