The funniest thing about laymen "intelligence"-collectors is that they aren't aware of how much work goes into PSYOPs. They think it's a one-time large scale and acute operation. They aren't aware that it's a very long build up, getting your attention by feeding you crumbs. / 🧵

So people will collect names, dates, etc. and try to make sense of the information by putting together a story.
They look at what a character says and not what a character is.
They follow drama, and bam when the event happens, they almost "anticipate" it and accept it whole.

The truth is PSYOPs span years. You see the event echoed in the past. Often the use of entirely fictitious organisations, cover groups. Real events with false reporting.
Do this enough times and you scatter data points in someone's head. Enough to "connect the dots"!

Our ability to sense patterns can indeed be used against us. All it takes is enough time, naivety and zero filtration of details.

This is why multiple intelligence organisations exist in a nation, each which monitor different aspects of intelligence independently.

There are indeed groups that everyone talks about which don't even exist. In Syria, it was the "_____ forces", a group promoted by the editor of Al Masadar, a strange media organization started by an American-Palestinian.

On the ground in Syria this "organization" did not exist!

Both Syria and Russia are discrete about organizational structure yet...

Out of the interest of my love for Syria, I won't add much more than to say I am still very amused by the intelligence analysis poisoned by that particular PSYOP. :) [Yes, I was asked to shut up about this]

That is not to say the men in these fabricated organizations aren't real -- they are. What is fabricated is the signalled organizational structure.
Most often these groups are directly linked to intelligence.

The US is no exception: The "Ukrainian state" is partially a PSYOP.

To conclude:
When going to war between nuclear super powers, "cover" is important as to leave a pathway back out of escalation.

That's why the US has only ever attacked "Wagner".
And Russia attacked "foreign mercs".

Think about why, overt attacks are far too dangerous.
