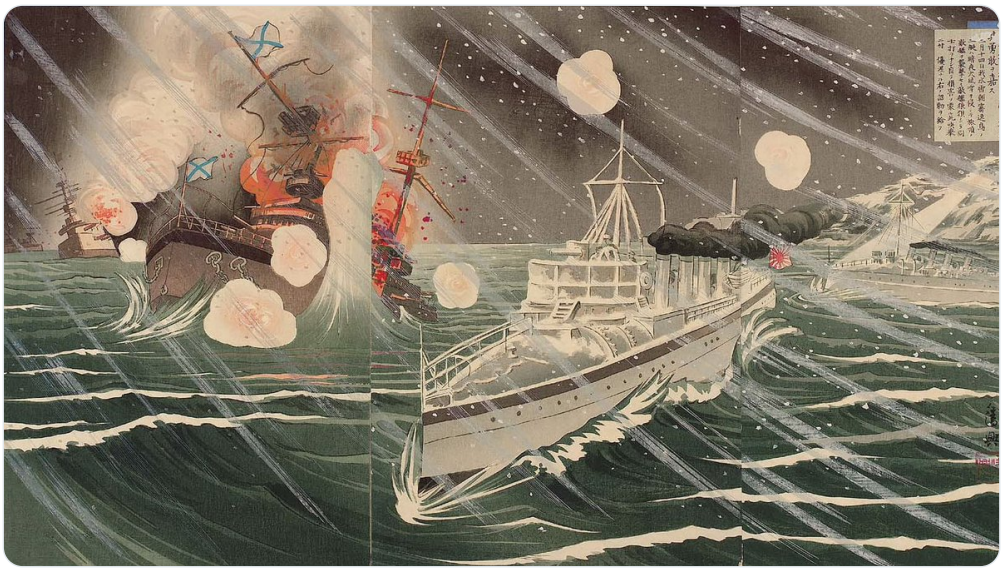
Korobochka (コロボ) @cirnosad

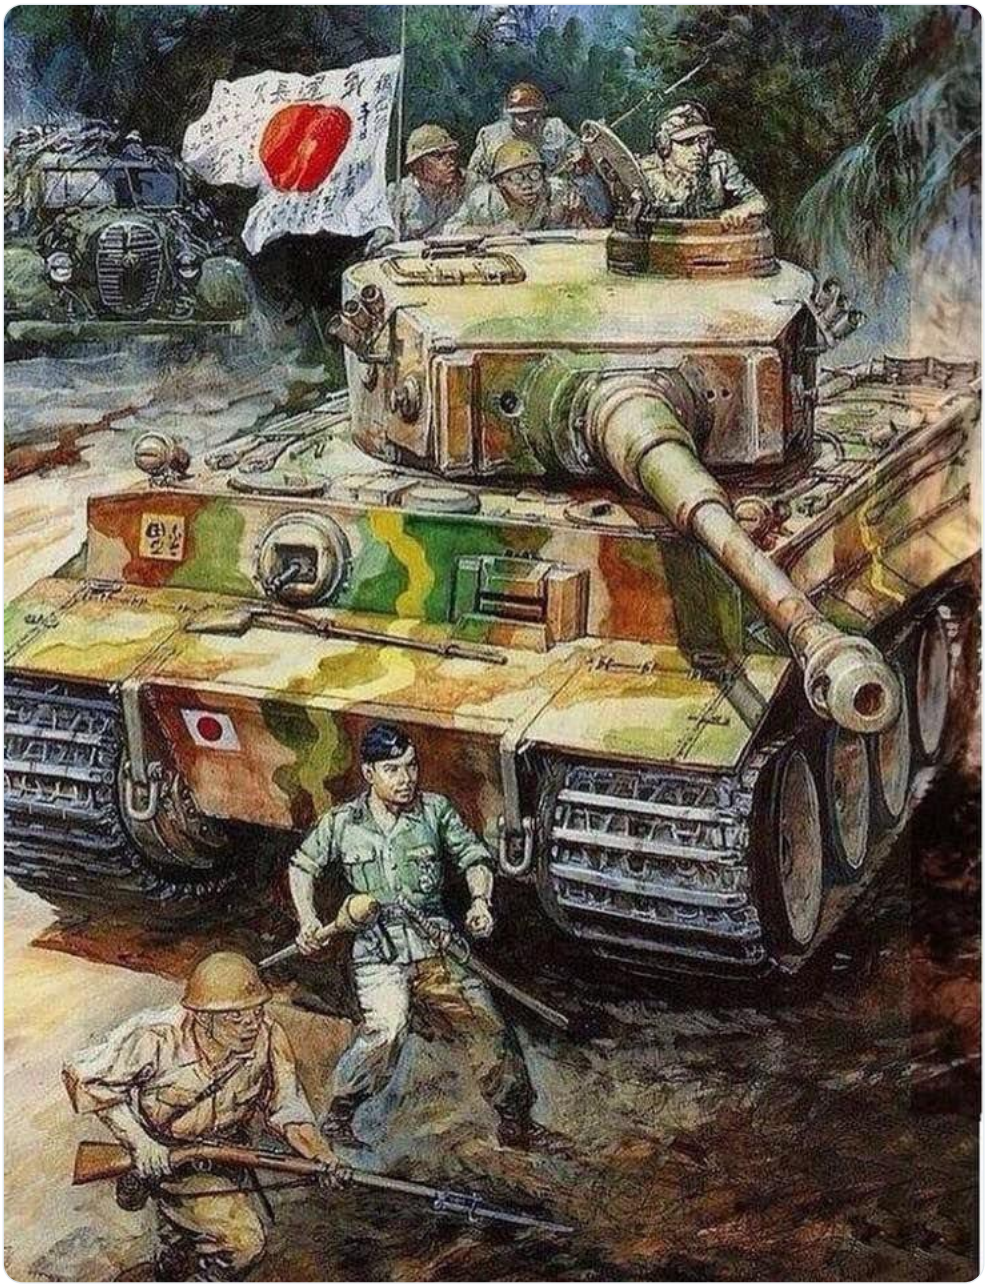
Apr 21, 2024 · 6 tweets · cirnosad/status/1782167462500581419

In the solipsistic American view, they had to nuke two Japanese cities because "muh Japanese people wouldn't surrender to us".
Little did their failing/collapsing education system teach them that Russia was (+still is) at war with Japan.
The Russians had taken Kuril islands.../🧵



... and were about to land on Hokkaido!

Beyond the pacific war, Japan had lost to Russia on the main Asian island. Not only was Japan negotiating a conditional surrender with the US, it was also doing the same thing with the Russians to see who would give it a better deal.



The Merimutts were enraged: They wanted it all to themselves after the pacific theatre! Some extremely evil people in the white house picked two targets: both rich in Catholics, and had nukes dropped on them.

This was immediately telegraphed to Stalin.

The Japanese were of course rattled, but the Soviets moreso. They suspended their planned assault on Hokkaido and didn't make any plans to go beyond Berlin where the Americans were stationed.

The Japanese then agreed to a conditional surrender, still.

The Americans, being merrimutts, had it telegraphed as an unconditional surrender (which is nonsense since they agreed to keep the Emperor, the one known condition the Japanese were willing to live with).

None of this exists in the burger education system but is it a surprise?

Today, Japan and Russia (who inherited the USSR), remain at war. No formal surrender was signed, because the Americans "won" that right by scaring the Soviets away.

If only the Russians knew that the US had no more nuclear bombs after Nagasaki, history would be different. /End

...