It's not easy to climb down from long, intricate plots and intersecting pieces of information, implied psychoanalysis just to come back to the simple truth:

"I was PSYOPed"

But it's the hardest thing for anyone to admit. Why? Because it puts into question their cognition. 🧵

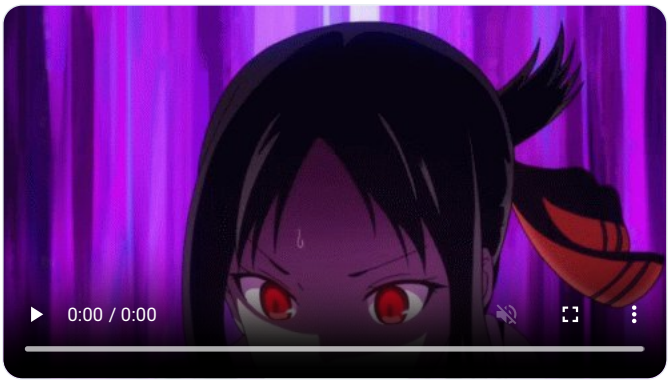
The truth is all of us are somewhat susceptible to PSYOPs. Some people more than others.

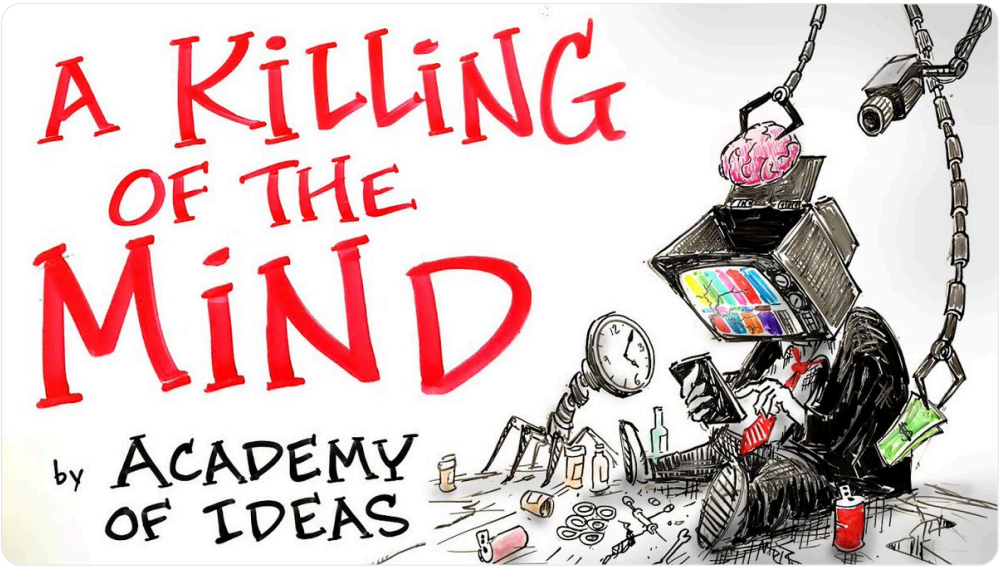
This doesn't mean those who are susceptible are any less valuable as people. It means they need to learn from and listen to those who are less susceptible.



I call myself dumb for a reason.
The smartest you think you are, the more likely you are to fall for PSYOPs.
The quicker you are to admit you're wrong, the less PSYOP load you carry.

I had to be more wrong than right...
Before I could be more right than wrong.

The more information you integrate into your thinking, the more likely you are to drift from the primordial truth.
The more datapoints you look at, the more likely you are to fit them all into your own preconceived notion.
Then every single thing mirrors what you already believe.



Most people don't know this but people die in PSYOPs.
It often involves simulated kinetic action.
There are some key indicators that differentiate real from simulated action -- but it's simplistic to think no one can die in these scenarios.
After all, accidents happen.

The worst that can happen if you assume something is a PSYOP is you'll look dumb and silly afterwards.
The worst that can happen if you assume something is not a PSYOP is you'll be stuck with that disinformation for the rest of your life
Like the tree of knowledge of good & evil.

So next time someone makes fun of you for saying it's a PSYOP... move along. They're closed off to reality, preferring to live in a simulation that will soon turn into a simulacrum after they forget about the PSYOP.

There's sadly little you can do for them.
