Korobochka (コロボ) @cirnosad

Jul 11, 2025 • 1 tweets • cirnosad/status/1943544948160368765

How to communicate for maximal effectiveness. /

Your objective should not be to promote yourself.
It shouldn't be to promote your favourite idea.
It should always be to reflect a vision of the world, whether a future, past or present vision.

First off, don't write until you have a complete and interlocked picture. Don't pollute other minds until you're ready or near your apotheosis.
Always write in echoes. Expressed differently each time, separated by years.
As your text must span time, it should circle in on itself in multiple ways.
Always initially reveal an idea in a strategically vague manner, as clarity leads to vulgarisation. It will catch a lot of heat, and this brings it attention -- the parasites will reveal their intentions to you and those who can see through the veil will make themselves known to you. Only return to it later, once your readers are prepared to fully digest it and integrate it with richer ideas of their own. A vulgarised idea kills the motivation to go further, always consider others are on their own journey of discovery and you shouldn't take that away from them.
Braid multiple subjects and disciplines together so that no one but someone on your level can possibly defile it. The more truthful and absolute statements are made that braid together, the more impossible it is for tricksters to inject themselves into the conversation.
Do not try to be academic, it's all a show. Instead speak from your heart so that those who truly appreciate you will follow along. General audiences are a lie.
Paradoxically, the more popular your writing, the less likely you are to say something truly novel. Never be disheartened by poor distribution. Only a few people in this world matter and you will surely reach them because they seek the same ideas.
You're always going to encounter parasitic scum who will put you down. There's two paths: to become callous to them, or to avoid looking at their material and have friends handle them. I choose the latter because I don't want my heart to grow callous in any way.

Just as you spend time on your own writing, appreciate that your readership, collectively, will likely spend even more time reading it. Put as much care and love into your work as you can. Expect the same from the rest.

Finally, remember, writing is only one way of communicating. Drawing, making music, the plastic arts, architecture, technology and other forms of representational-functional τέχνη are the "proteins" of our societal cytoplasm. Instead of spending all your time consuming other people's creations, balance it by taking inspiration from them and producing your own.

Only through effective, loving and un-vulgarised communication can we ever restore our society and save humanity.

/End

• • •