Korobochka (コロボ) 🇺🇸✝️🇷🇺 @cirnosad

Jan 21, 2023 · 9 tweets · cirnosad/status/1616774703074664452

Look it's simple why the west is seemingly reluctant to send anything except trash to Ukraine 🧵:

It's the first quarter of the 21st century. There is absolutely no way 100 tanks or even 10,000 tanks will be able to compete with the combined arms they face.

Committing even 1 tank to Ukraine is a complete waste of time, Russia will burn it up and NATO will not even be able to REACH Russia's tanks in the process.

In order to send the tanks and use them effectively, NATO also has to bring helicopters, jets, AD, ships, armies.

That's why you're hearing talk about Patriot missiles and F-16s alongside the talk about the tanks, along with the hang-wringing on the latter.

The only thing NATO can do without a full commitment to the war in Ukraine is buy time -- but this time is bought for Russia too.

At any point in time, NATO will have 3 options:

1. Fold in Ukraine and see the anglo-nazi empire begin to wither away in the wind like a pulverized skeleton.
2. Fully commit to Ukraine and treat it like an actual war instead of a proxy war.
3. Send resources w/ low efficiency.

Option 3 is what Poland and other idiotic nations are pushing, and as I said, it would be like throwing these resources away in case Option 2 is required.

Option 1 is the reflection of the collapse of the USSR and the arrogant west will never agree to it.

That leaves Option 2.

Option 2 is the hot phase of WWIII, which will either immediately or eventually trigger strategic strikes across all NATO launch platforms and airbases around the world, most likely precipitating into a nuclear war.

Why air bases? Russia is a land power but NATO owns the air.

If NATO attempts to repeat what we saw in Syria with a "deconfliction zone" in the west of Ukraine, it will spell doom to Russia's mission. Russia will either have to attrition NATO's air force with hit and run tactics, or take out the airbases.

Needless to say, once you start going down this path, the chance of nuclear war jumps from likely (right now) to certain. Whatever we say past that point will be a requiem for our world, which will have plunged into the abyss never to return again.

/End

https://www.youtube.com/embed/DmYYYEtdOIM

hand*-wringing

• • •